"Veloiretti B.V. - brand book, edition 2026"

Demo stand-in. This document exists so the studio has something real to read during a demo. Its content matches what the agent is seeded to extract; the identity, voice and blocked words come from Veloiretti's own material, the market list and the product claims do not.

03 MISSION

"Every short car trip is an opening."

Replace short car trips in European cities with rides people actually prefer.

Not "reduce emissions". Not "reimagine mobility". A bike that is better than the car for the trip someone is about to take, and available in the city where they are taking it.

04 POSITIONING

Electric cargo and commuter bikes engineered for daily distance, sold and serviced through independent dealers.

Daily distance is the test. Everything on the bike is judged by whether it survives a commute repeated five days a week for five years: the belt, the bearings, the finish on the rack, the way the battery seats.

"We do not sell direct. The dealer is part of the product."

The dealer fits the bike, services it, and handles the warranty. That is not a distribution choice, it is part of what is being sold, and it recurs through the channel section as a constraint on everything we say.

05 VISION

A European city where the fastest way across town is also the quietest.

We want the bike lane to be the default lane. That is a vision, not a mission: it says where we are going, not what we do on Monday.

06 THE PRODUCT WORLD

Three lines. Electric, City, Kids.

Electric carries the range and the assist. City carries the carrier, the basket and the everyday trip. Kids carries the handover: the first bike a parent buys that is built like the one they ride themselves.

07 PHOTOGRAPHY

Daylight. Real streets. The bike in use rather than the bike on a plinth.

People are shown mid-trip, not posed beside the product. If a rider looks like they are modelling, the shot is wrong.

08 THE BIKE IN THE CITY

Context is the argument. A bike photographed against a white wall says nothing about a commute. A bike photographed on the route says all of it.

09 MARKETS

"Core four: NL, DE, BE, DK."

Netherlands, Germany, Belgium and Denmark are the served markets. Dealer coverage, service network and warranty handling are in place in all four.

Austria and Switzerland appear on the map in a lighter tint, labelled "2027 pipeline". They are not markets yet and nothing may be addressed to them.

10 DEALER NETWORK

340 partner dealers across the core four. The dealer is the service promise, so any claim about availability or speed of service is a claim about them.

11 AUDIENCES

"Meet Joris, Anna, Sven, Mila and Bram."

Joris rides 14 km each way and wants to arrive without changing his shirt.
Anna runs a fleet of twelve and cares about uptime.
Sven owns a shop and sells what he can service.
Mila does the school run and the groceries on the same bike.
Bram is buying his daughter her first real bike.

Five personas, three commercial audiences. There is no formal segment list in this book, and that is deliberate: the personas are for writing, the segments are for buying media.

12 WHO WE ARE NOT FOR

Sport. Racing. Weekend distance. We do not build for the ride that is the point of the day.

13 TONE IN ONE LINE

Say what the thing does, then stop.

14 HOW WE WRITE

"Say the number. Skip the adjective."

Fourteen approved headlines:

90 km, then a socket.
Built for the commute you already make.
The rack is rated 27 kg. So is the one on the Pro.
Arrive dry.
Twelve years on the frame.
Your dealer fits it. Your dealer fixes it.
Belt driven, so nothing to oil.
Two sizes. Both fit a child seat.
The battery takes four hours.
Lights that stay on at the lights.
One bike, five days a week, five years.
A bike that takes the shopping.
Made to be serviced.
Quiet, because there is nothing to rattle.

Do and do not:

Do say 90 km range at 25 km/h assist
Do not say incredible range

Do say 12-year frame warranty
Do not say built to last forever

Do say service within 48 hours
Do not say service you can count on

15 READING LEVEL

"Language a first-time buyer understands."

Someone buying their first electric bike should not have to know what a torque sensor is to follow the sentence. Technical specification copy in the appendix reads harder than this, and that is allowed there and nowhere else.

16 NEVER WRITE

"No revolutions. We make bikes."

revolutionary effortless game-changing unleash

Four further entries in this column are style notes rather than words: avoid stacked adjectives, avoid the word "simply", do not open on a question, and do not end on an ellipsis.

17 NAMING

Product names are set in sentence case except where the model name is a proper noun. Ace Two Pro, Ivy Two Lite, Caferacer.

18 THE WORDMARK

Never redrawn, never recoloured, never set in another typeface. Black on light, white on dark, and nothing else.

19 LOGO CLEARANCE

Clear space around the wordmark is the height of the V on all four sides.

20 CO-BRANDING

Dealer marks sit beside ours at equal optical weight, never inside our clear space.

21 PRODUCT CLAIMS, ELECTRIC

90 km range on the Cargo Line at 25 km/h assist.

"Range figures per WLTP-e cycle, see appendix C."

Two further range figures circulate internally without a footnote reference. They are not approved and may not be used.

22 BATTERY

Charge time and capacity figures are held by product marketing and are not reproduced here.

23 FRAME

Aluminium, welded and finished in the Netherlands.

24 DRIVE

Belt drive on every electric model. No chain, no oil, no adjustment.

25 ACCESSORIES

The carrier, the basket and the child seat are part of the sale, not an afterthought to it.

Claims in this area are governed by the legal guidelines, not by this book.

27 PACKAGING

One swatch on the palette page is marked "packaging only" and is excluded from every other surface.

28 RETAIL

The shop floor is the dealer's. Our job is that the bike reads the same there as it does in a campaign.

29 PRODUCT CLAIMS, SERVICE

12-year frame warranty.

Service within 48 hours at 340 partner dealers.

Both are contractual and both are footnoted in the dealer agreement.
